How to fill out 78-032 — Total Loss Claim Application for Certificate of Title

sellmycarhub.com

Mississippi · written against 78-032 (Rev 05/22), issued under the insurance company or licensed auction - the form's own foot says forms must be completed by the Insurance Company or Auction </forms/mississippi/78-032-total-loss-claim-application/>

The insurer's break-glass form, on this page so a seller reads it rather than fills it: used only when the insurance company is unable to obtain the properly endorsed title after disbursing a total loss settlement, or when it abandons the vehicle to a licensed auction. It certifies the owner elected to retain the salvage, documents two written attempts to reach them, and applies for the salvage or junk title over the missing signature - with a $9.00 fee and a thirty-day filing window.

Every line, in the order you meet it

| 1 | AGENT | The precondition, honestly met | The insurer confirms it disbursed a settlement and genuinely cannot obtain the endorsed title, or abandoned the unit to a licensed auction. Watch out: For the seller reading along: this box is about your unanswered mail. The form exists downstream of silence.                          |
| 2 | AGENT | Salvage or junk                | One box, matching what the owner elected to retain and what the vehicle is. Watch out: Sellers, note the asymmetry before agreeing to anything on the phone: salvage can be rebuilt and retitled after inspection; junk is forever.                                                          |
| 3 | AGENT | The evidence checkboxes        | The written attempts, the request letter, the lienholder proof - or the auction's parallel set with proof of delivery. Watch out: Certified copies attach; the Title Bureau reads them against the certification, and any incomplete form will be rejected is printed where the agent signs. |
| 4 | AGENT | Vehicle, owner, claim, dates   | VIN through settlement date, the file's whole identity in one block. Watch out: The date of settlement starts the thirty-day submission window; the date of total loss anchors the brand. They are different dates doing different work.                                                     |
| 5 | AGENT | Signature and position         | The authorized agent signs with their position title, for the company or the auction. Watch out: A seller shown this form afterwards should read one thing first: whether the box says salvage or junk, because that word is now the vehicle's biography.                                    |

What gets this one rejected

- A seller submitting it. The foot assigns authorship - forms must be completed by the Insurance Company or Auction - and an owner's version of this situation is the ordinary signed title, not this form.
- Handwriting. The precondition line requires it typed or computer printed; the fillable PDF exists because the Title Bureau will not read pen on this one.
- Certifying attempts that were not made. The two written attempts are the form's whole legal engine - it moves a title without the owner's signature on the strength of them.
- A protected lienholder taken on faith. The insurance route attaches proof the lienholder's interest was protected; a lender left dangling is exactly what the attachment exists to prevent.
- Missing the window. Thirty days from settlement disbursement, and incomplete forms are rejected - late plus incomplete is how these files die.
